PERENA

remove the onchain elements first, only relevant as past background, also focus on silk emboidery as fabric theme

House of Perena evolves its fintech roots into a silk-focused fashion house, drawing from the founders' passion for art, craft, and East-West design. Silk embroidery emerges as the signature fabric theme, celebrating heritage techniques with modern flair for discerning global tastemakers.

Updated Brand Narrative

House of Perena (est. 2026) channels the Shanghainese founder's NYC-Shanghai glamour—opulent 1930s Art Deco meets urban edge—with the Singaporean co-founder's journeys across Singapore and China, infused by Japanese wabi-sabi serenity. Silk embroidery anchors this "Neo-Asian Luxury," reviving ancient Suzhou stitching and kimono motifs in limited-edition collections that echo Loewe's artisanal revival and Celine's timeless poise.

Design Aesthetic

Designs blend Shanghai silk opulence with Japanese restraint: hand-embroidered panels on minimalist coats, asymmetrical hems, and fluid trousers in bio-fine silks with subtle Deco or haiku patterns. Muted palettes—ivory, rust, charcoal—create genderless silhouettes of "whispered extravagance," where embroidery tells migration stories, mirroring Aimé Leon Dore's nostalgic prep and Kith's layered nostalgia.

This taste prioritizes silk's tactile poetry—luminous yet imperfect—for heirloom pieces that feel soulful and contemporary.

Products and Niche

Core offerings center silk embroidery: ready-to-wear (embroidered blazers, kimono wraps), accessories (obi belts, Puzzle-inspired totes with stitched motifs), and artisan capsules. The niche: elevated silk craft for urban art patrons (25-45, Asia-US hubs), priced $700-$5,000, positioning as craft-forward luxury without digital gimmicks.

Founder Influences Table

Founder	Background	Silk Embroidery Infusion
Shanghainese (NYC)	Deco legacy, urban grit	Opulent Suzhou patterns, bold stitching
Singaporean	SG-China travels, Japanese love	Wabi-sabi asymmetry, serene threads

Brand Influence	Perena Silk Adaptation
Loewe: Avant-garde craft	Embroidered surrealism
Celine: Functional chic	Minimalist silk versatility
Aimé Leon Dore: Nostalgic prep	Urban silk heritage
Kith: Lifestyle layers	Embroidered storytelling

House of Perena masters silk embroidery as cultural poetry, scaling thoughtfully for fashion house prominence.
